Airport's new weather system

DeKalb County Airport manager Russ Couchman, left, and Scott Picha, maintenance contractor, are shown in the flight planning office at the airport terminal Wednesday during commissioning of an Automated Weather Observation System by the Federal Aviation Administration. The system gives pilots current weather information including temperature, dew point, barometric pressure, visibility and ceiling, and wind speed and direction. The data is available to pilots by computer or telephone. The AWOS and a soon-to-be-completed instrument landing system are federally-funded projects that are spurring airport growth.
